Music: Lundin / Lyrics: Væring

What called her loudest laughter made him smile
What made her cry caused him to sigh
He touched her skin and thought he touched her soul
She thought of words to reach inside of him
His silence broke her heart and stole her light
The things she'd said would wake him up at night

He had to close his eyes to clearly see
To bring her closer to feel free
She sought her landscapes in his open face
Wide open spaces right beneath his skin
He chose a white room for his sacred shrine
She picked a yellow bright and well defined

He thought it over once and then again
She shrugged and jumped right at the chance
The dreams the shared and all their best laid plans
Became their true relief and last resort
He went inside and pulled the curtains down
She stepped outside and sought all over town
